We keep inventing new things that make new longings, new holes that must be filled. Some people are furious that our hearts are pierced this way by the things we make. They see this ever-neediness as a lowering of human nobility, the source of our continual discontentment. The momentum of technologies pushes us to chase the newest, which are always disappearing beneath the advent of the next new thing, so satisfaction continues to recede from our grasp. But I celebrate the never-ending discontentment that technology brings. We are different from our animal ancestors in that we are not content to merely survive, but have been incredibly busy making up new itches that we have to scratch, creating new desires we've never had before. This discontent is the trigger for our ingenuity and growth. We cannot expand our self, and our collective self, without making holes in our heart. We are stretching our boundaries and widening the small container that holds our identity.

- ① the problem of lowering human nobility by material wealth
- ② the impossibility of fulfilling ever-growing human greed
- ③ the function of dissatisfaction as a driver for enhancement
- ④ the obstacle to happiness coming from discontentment
- ⑤ the need for new technology to accelerate economic growth

When people think about the development of cities, rarely do they consider the critical role of vertical transportation. In fact, each day, more than 7 billion elevator journeys are taken in tall buildings all over the world. Efficient vertical transportation can expand our ability to build taller and taller skyscrapers. Antony Wood, a Professor of Architecture at the Illinois Institute of Technology, explains that advances in elevators over the past 20 years are probably the greatest advances we have seen in tall buildings. For example, elevators in the Jeddah Tower in Jeddah, Saudi Arabia, under construction, will reach a height record of 660m.

The Internet and communication technologies play an ever-increasing role in the social lives of young people in developed societies. Adolescents have been quick to immerse themselves in technology with most ① using the Internet to communicate. Young people treat the mobile phone as an essential necessity of life and often prefer to use text messages to communicate with their friends. Young people also ② increasingly access social networking websites. As technology and the Internet are a familiar resource for young people, it is logical ③ what they would seek assistance from this source. This has been shown by the increase in websites that provide therapeutic information for young people. A number of 'youth friendly' mental health websites ④ have been developed. The information ⑤ presented often takes the form of Frequently Asked Questions, fact sheets and suggested links. It would seem, therefore, logical to provide online counselling for young people.

As global food trade has grown, external markets have become an increasingly important source of national food supplies. It is debated whether this change has ① resulted in higher or lower levels of national and/or household food security. Theoretically, removing trade barriers has the effect of reducing food prices, thus ② increasing access to food by the poor. However, lower-priced imports can ③ undermine the domestic market for food produced by domestic farmers, many of whom are poor, thus worsening their food security. In an attempt to ④ resolve the debate about the impact of agricultural trade liberalization on food security, a report from the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) concluded that even where food prices do fall this is not necessarily a straightforward ⑤ disadvantage. If many of the poorest households are dependent directly or indirectly on agricultural production for their main income, the overall effect on food security may be negative.

A central issue in art education, as in general education, is access to instruction. ①In very early times the arts were either learned through group rituals that were an integral part of worship or taught to a selected few through arduous apprenticeship. ②While some societies regarded knowledge of the arts as the privilege of a social elite, others thought that the visual arts were subjects fit only for slaves and the children of artisans. ③In the nineteenth century working-class women in Europe could study the decorative arts, while study of the fine arts, except under highly unusual circumstances, was for men. ④Diverse patronage created conditions that fostered a degree of competition among artists, which, in turn, encouraged each artist to emphasize his or her own individual style. ⑤Thus all through the history of art education, access to instruction was affected by class, gender, and the general social status of the visual arts as a subject for study.

A cross-cultural perspective on the self and others is that the conception of political power as a coercive force is a Western cultural obsession. It is a culturally specific idea, not a universal one. It is important to avoid this ethnocentrism. For many native peoples of Amazonia, the idea of a political leader as a coercive commander is abhorrent. The political system is based on an individual's autonomy and freedom. The power of a leader is to persuade, not to command. The idea that an individual would have coercive power over another is anathema. The Western notion of political power as 'domination' is a cultural bias, a 'political personhood' constructed from our own cultural obsessions.

It is ____ (A) ____ to understand political power in other cultures through our own notion of it because ideas of political power are not ____ (B) ____ across cultures.
