Every farmer knows that the hard part is getting the field ① prepared. Inserting seeds and watching ② them grow is easy. In the case of science and industry, the community prepares the field, yet society tends to give all the credit to the individual who happens to plant a successful seed. Planting a seed does not necessarily require overwhelming intelligence; creating an environment that allows seeds to prosper ③ does. We need to give more credit to the community in science, politics, business, and daily life. Martin Luther King Jr. was a great man. Perhaps his greatest strength was his ability ④ to inspire people to work together to achieve, against all odds, revolutionary changes in society's perception of race and in the fairness of the law. But to really understand ⑤ that he accomplished requires looking beyond the man. Instead of treating him as the manifestation of everything great, we should appreciate his role in allowing America to show that it can be great.

To designate a hell is not, of course, ① to tell us anything about how to extract people from that hell, how to moderate hells flames. Still, it seems a good in itself to acknowledge, to have enlarged, ones sense of how much suffering caused by human wickedness there ② is in the world we share with others. Someone who is perennially surprised that depravity exists, who continues to feel disillusioned (even incredulous) when ③ confronted with evidence of what humans are capable of inflicting in the way of gruesome, hands-on cruelties upon other humans, has not reached moral or psychological adulthood. No one after a certain age has the right to this kind of innocence, of superficiality, to this degree of ignorance, or amnesia. There now exists a vast repository of images that make ④ it harder to maintain this kind of moral defectiveness. Let the atrocious images haunt us. Even if they are only tokens, and cannot possibly encompass most of the reality ⑤ which they refer, they still perform a vital function.

As globalization marches forward, the world gets smaller and smaller and collaboration technology gets better and better. Yet only a handful of these advancements like international conference calls, IP phones, and video chats ① allowing people to speak rather than to write. Now, more information is exchanged via text than ever before, making it ② extremely important that you can communicate effectively in writing. If you plan on participating in this knowledge economy, ③ which grows more and more important with each passing day, you will need to learn how to write fairly well. You don't have to be Shakespeare, but you do need to know how to express ④ yourself properly in written form. This is because not only ⑤ is writing an important academic skill, but it is also an important skill that translates into any career field.
