After moving to a new city, I ① joined the company baseball team. Being the oldest player, I had to play the outfield. During one game, I made a ② few mistakes. Then I kept ③ hearing someone shouting, "Way to go, Mr. Green" and "You can do it, Mr. Green." I was amazed someone would know my name in this strange city. After the game, I met my wife and son and asked ④ that they knew who was shouting encouragement in the stand. My son spoke up and said, "Dad, it was me." I asked why he was calling me Mr. Green and he replied, "I didn't want anyone ⑤ to know that I'm your son."

Positively or negatively, our parents and families are powerful influences on us. But even ① stronger, especially when we're young, are our friends. We often choose friends as a way of ② expanding our sense of identity beyond our families. As a result, the pressure to conform to the standards and expectations of friends and other social groups ③ is likely to be intense. Judith Rich Harris, who is a developmental psychologist, ④ arguing that three main forces shape our development: personal temperament, our parents, and our peers. The influence of peers, she argues, is much stronger than that of parents. "The world ⑤ that children share with their peers," she says, "is what shapes their behavior and modifies the characteristics they were born with, and hence determines the sort of people they will be when they grow up."

It's important to remember that good decisions can still lead to bad outcomes. Here is an example. Soon after I got out of school, I ① was offered a job. I wasn't sure that was a great fit for me. After carefully considering the opportunity, I decided to ② turn it down. I thought that I would be able to find another job ③ what was a better match. Unfortunately, the economy soon grew worse quickly and I spent months ④ looking for another job. I kicked myself for ⑤ not taking that position, which started to look more and more appealing. I had made a good decision, based upon all the information I had at the time, but in the short run it didn't lead to a great outcome.
