It is no accident that every human culture divides its tasks. Indeed, try to imagine a modern corporation that refused to use division of labor. It would quickly go out of business because it could not possibly compete with other corporations that ① rely on division of labor. When factories were first invented, many of them were simply places ② where master craftspeople built entire products themselves, working side by side but not interacting. In the 1700s and 1800s, however, they were all replaced by factories that divided the manufacturing process into many parts and assigned ③ them to different people. The advantage could be measured in money. A master craftsman ④ build an entire dining room set is expensive to hire, because the skill requires long and thorough training. In contrast, if the task of building the table and chairs can be divided into parts, nobody needs to have as many skills as the one master craftsman ⑤ does. The total work is cheaper, because fewer skills are required at every part.

Humans are so averse to feeling that they're being cheated ① that they often respond in ways that seemingly make little sense. Behavioral economists the economists who actually study ② what people do as opposed to the kind who simply assume the human mind works like a calculator have shown again and again that people reject unfair offers even if ③ it costs them money to do so. The typical experiment uses a task called the ultimatum game. It's pretty straightforward. One person in a pair is given some money say 10. She then has the opportunity to offer some amount of it to her partner. The partner only has two options. He can take what's offered or ④ refused to take anything. There's no room for negotiation; that's why it's called the ultimatum game. What typically happens? Many people offer an equal split to the partner, ⑤ leaving both individuals happy and willing to trust each other in the future.

The Greeks, who had rejected Cyrus when he approached them with an offer to become his allies against Croesus, now (A) demanded / demanding the same favored status and political independence they had enjoyed under the Lydians. When Cyrus refused, the Greeks who lived along the coast of Asia Minor appealed to Sparta for protection. Sparta, the most powerful military power on the Greek mainland, sent a delegation to Sardis to warn Cyrus to keep away from the Greeks of Asia Minor. He quizzically inquired, "Who are these Spartans?" and then sent his armies to defeat the coastal cities, most of (B) them / which surrendered or quickly reached an accommodation with him. Over time, Cyrus found that the Greeks, especially the Spartans and Athenians, were excellent, disciplined fighters but, like members of a dysfunctional family, could not set aside their differences long enough to cooperate; nor (C) could their leaders / their leaders could resist bribes to betray each other.
