The rise of voluntary simplicity in advanced (or late) stages of capitalism, and for the privileged members of these societies, is explainable by a psychological theory of Abraham Maslow. Maslow suggests ① that human needs are organized in a hierarchy. At the base ② are basic creature comforts, such as the need for food, shelter and clothing. Higher in the hierarchy is the need for love and esteem. The hierarchy is crowned with self-expression. Maslow theorized that people seek to satisfy lower needs before they tum to higher ones, although he does not deal with the question of the extent ③ to which lower needs have to be satiated before people move to deal with higher level needs. There are some who suggest that Maslows theory ④ has disproven because people seek to satisfy their needs not in the sequence he stipulated or even all at once. This may well be the case, but the only issue relevant here is if people continue to heavily invest ⑤ themselves in the quest for creature comforts long after they are quite richly endowed in such goods.

One of the simplest and most effective ways to build empathy in children ① is to let them play more on their own. Unsupervised kids are not reluctant to tell one another how they feel. In addition, children at play often take on other roles, pretending to be Principal Walsh or Josh's mom, happily forcing ② themselves to imagine how someone else thinks and feels. Unfortunately, free play is becoming rare. Boston College research professor Peter Gray has documented a continuous and ③ ultimately dramatic decline in children's opportunities to play and explore in their own chosen ways over the past fifty years in the United States and other developed countries. The effects have been especially ④ damaged, he argues, to empathy. He concludes that a decline of empathy and a rise in narcissism are exactly ⑤ what we would expect to see in children who have little opportunity to play socially.

Coffee is an important part of the Italian cuisine. Many of the different kinds of coffee drinks that we have around the world ① have originated from Italy. We commonly see people ② having coffee with milk. But it was the Italians ③ that first started the trend with the cappuccino which has coffee, milk, and an addition of milk foam on top. In the West and generally around the world, you can go for a cup of coffee ④ whenever you want. This attitude, however, will not ⑤ accept in Italy, where coffee is only a breakfast drink.
