Preemption means that a strategy is designed to prevent a rival from starting some particular activity. In some case a preemptive move may simply be an announcement of some intent ① that might discourage rivals from doing the same. The idea of preemption implies that timing is sometimes very important — a decision or an action at one point in time might be much more rewarding than ② doing it at a different time point. Preemption may involve up-weighting advertising for a period before and during ③ when a new entrant launches into a market. The intent is to make it more difficult for the new entrant's advertising to make an impression on potential buyers. Product proliferation is another potential preemption strategy. The general idea is to launch a large variety of product variants so that there is very little in the way of market demand that ④ are not accommodated. Arguably, if a market is already filled with product variants it is more difficult for competitors to find ⑤ untapped pockets of market demand.

Flourishing requires connectivity, or what is called psychological attunement. Attunement means having a sensitivity to what is going on inside yourself; being on the same emotional wavelength as other people, and ① sensing how things are unfolding around you. When you are fully attuned in this way, you are like a skilled actor, performing at his or her best, fully in command of the stage. You need that kind of connectivity to flourish because every challenge requires ② you to be fully present. When you are in tune with yourself, aware of what you are feeling and thinking, as well as what is motivating you, ③ which is easier to take possession of yourself, to compose yourself, so that all the different bits of you are marching to the same beat. Your desire is not pulling against your reluctance or against anxiety. The psychologist Carl Rogers believed that ④ such unconflicted energy is the basis of optimum functioning. When you feel this free-flowing energy, like a runner in full stride, you are flourishing, every part of you ⑤ working in concert.

Ranks are standards that often confer rewards on people and things of higher rank, and sometimes penalties on those of lower rank. For example, grade A butter will ① likely command a higher price than grade B, and persons with more formal education will be likely to command greater incomes than those with less. Nor ② are the rewards associated with ranks confined to the monetary sphere. Those persons with higher ranks may be ③ given the opportunity to make more important decisions (such as higher-ranking persons in the military, government, or corporations), while things of higher rank may be esteemed as art objects (e.g., excellence in industrial design). Of note, ranks are frequently contested. Some ranks are widely accepted and used, while ④ others are subject to continued heated debate. But even the most well-established rankings can be challenged by those ⑤ who standpoint differs from the commonly accepted one.
