One wellknown shift took place when the accepted view that the Earth was the center of the universe — changed to one where we understood that we are only inhabitants on one planet ① orbiting the Sun. With each person who grasped the solar system view, ② it became easier for the next person to do so. So it is with the notion that the world revolves around the human economy. This is slowly being replaced by the view that the economy is a part of the larger system of material flows that connect all living things. When this perspective shifts into place, it will be obvious that our economic wellbeing requires that we account for, and ③ respond to, factors of ecological health. Unfortunately we do not have a century or two ④ make the change. By clarifying the nature of the old and new perspectives, and by identifying actions ⑤ on which we might cooperate to move the process along, we can help accelerate the shift.

Undoubtedly, one of the most difficult skills to learn is how to keep a discussion focused. It is your task as chair to keep the discussion on track without appearing rude or domineering. If you do not do this, there is bound to be a growing feeling that the real purpose of the meeting is not being achieved. One useful 'trick of the trade' is to thank people for their contributions so far, to remind them of what the main issues are what they need to decide on, and to draw their attention to aspects of the topic that have not yet been discussed. Towards the end, you can ask if anyone else wishes to contribute before you call for a vote. In extreme cases, you will need to be very assertive and to remind people of the ground rules whereby they agree to listen to each other without interruption, and to avoid being domineering. On occasion, you may need to address the person who is being domineering, thanking them for making their point so clearly, but asking them to 'sit back for a while to allow other members of the group to put their points forward. *

When I was young, my parents worshipped medical doctors as if they were exceptional beings ① possessing godlike qualities. But I never dreamed of pursuing a career in medicine until I entered the hospital for a rare disease. I became a medical curiosity, attracting some of the area's top specialists to look in on me and ② review my case. As a patient, and a teenager ③ eager to return to college, I asked each doctor who examined me, "What caused my disease?" "How will you make me better?" The typical response was nonverbal. They shook their heads and walked out of my room. I remember ④ thinking to myself, "Well, I could do that." When it became clear to me ⑤ what no doctor could answer my basic questions, I walked out of the hospital against medical advice. Returning to college, I pursued medicine with a great passion.
