A plant-based diet lets the earth breathe easier. The cultivation of crops for direct human consumption is much more efficient than using grains or beans to fatten up farm animals. Only a small part of the nutrients that cattle or other animals take in are left in their muscles. The rest (A) are / is used up to power their movements, metabolism, body warmth, and other life functions. A few decades ago, Scientific American reported that producing a pound of bacon requires ten times as much crop land (in the form of feed grains) (B) as / than is used to make the same quantity of artificial bacon from soybeans. The cultivation of those feed crops (C) requiring / requires land, water, and pesticides and other chemicals that add to our environmental problems.

Although sports nutrition is a fairly new academic discipline, there have always been recommendations ① made to athletes about foods that could enhance athletic performance. One ancient Greek athlete is reported to ② have eaten dried figs to enhance training. There are reports that marathon runners in the 1908 Olympics drank cognac to improve performance. The teenage running phenomenon, Mary Decker, surprised the sports world in the 1970s when she reported ③ that she ate a plate of spaghetti noodles the night before a race. Such practices may be suggested to athletes ④ because of their real or perceived benefits by individuals who excelled in their sports. Obviously, some of these practices, such as drinking alcohol during a marathon, are no longer recommended, but others, such as a high-carbohydrate meal the night before a competition, ⑤ has stood the test of time.

While we don't all have the same amount of money, we do have access to the same twenty four hours in every day. Though some people have ① much less free time than others, nearly everyone has some opportunity to give. The gift of time can sometimes be more ② satisfied and more valuable than money. You can see this by watching those who have volunteered at homeless shelters or ③ brought meals on wheels to seniors. If you are willing to volunteer, there are many organizations and projects ④ that will be glad to welcome you. ⑤ Whatever you do, it will almost certainly be educational, enjoyable, and rewarding.
