How you focus your attention plays a critical role in how you deal with stress. Scattered attention harms your ability to let go of stress, because even though your attention is scattered, it is narrowly focused, for you are able to fixate only on the stressful parts of your experience. When your attentional spotlight is widened, you can more easily let go of stress. You can put in perspective many more aspects of any situation and not get locked into one part that ties you down to superficial and anxiety-provoking levels of attention. A narrow focus heightens the stress level of each experience, but a widened focus turns down the stress level because you're better able to put each situation into a broader perspective. One anxiety-provoking detail is less important than the bigger picture. It's like transforming yourself into a nonstick frying pan. You can still fry an egg, but the egg won't stick to the pan.

- ① never being confronted with any stressful experiences in daily life
- ② broadening one's perspective to identify the cause of stress
- ③ rarely confining one's attention to positive aspects of an experience
- ④ having a larger view of an experience beyond its stressful aspects
- ⑤ taking stress into account as the source of developing a wide view

Before the web, newspaper archives were largely the musty domain of professional researchers and journalism students. Journalism was, by definition, current. The general accessibility of archives has greatly extended the shelf life of journalism, with older stories now regularly cited to provide context for more current ones. With regard to how meaning is made of complex issues encountered in the news, this departure can be understood as a readiness by online news consumers to engage with the underlying issues and contexts of the news that was not apparent in, or even possible for, print consumers. One of the emergent qualities of online news, determined in part by the depth of readily accessible online archives, seems to be the possibility of understanding news stories as the manifest outcomes of larger economic, social and cultural issues rather than short-lived and unconnected media spectacles.

- ① Web-based Journalism: Lasting Longer and Contextually Wider
- ② With the Latest Content, Online News Beats Daily Newspapers!
- ③ How Online Media Journalists Reveal Hidden Stories Behind News
- ④ Let's Begin a Journey to the Past with Printed Newspapers!
- ⑤ Present and Future of Journalism in the Web World

The nonliving participates in communication. In the communication, the nonliving plays an important role in both message and response. Take satellites, unmanned space stations, or planetary probes. Ground controllers can signal them to change their orbit day in and day out, to collect rocks hundreds of million kilometers away, or (A) destroy / to destroy themselves. More common examples include TV remote controls and answering machines. And none of these conversations need to be one-way. Machines can maintain a buildings environment: ventilation, heating, cooling, humidity, lighting, and so forth. Although (B) being / having created by humans, they do so without human intervention, through a conversation between thermostats, motion detectors, hygrometers, and computers, to name a few. In sum, the nonliving is centrally involved in (C) what / which we call conversations, not only as one of the countless links between message and response, but also as a partner in conversation.

- ① destroy - being - what
- ② destroy - having - what
- ③ to destroy - being - what

Everywhere we turn we hear about almighty "cyberspace"! The hype promises that we will leave our boring lives, put on goggles and body suits, and enter some metallic, three-dimensional, multimedia otherworld. When the Industrial Revolution arrived with its great innovation, the motor, we didn't leave our world to go to some ①remote motorspace! On the contrary, we brought the motors into our lives, as automobiles, refrigerators, drill presses, and pencil sharpeners. This ②absorption has been so complete that we refer to all these tools with names that declare their usage, not their "motoriness." These innovations led to a major socioeconomic movement precisely because they entered and ③affected profoundly our everyday lives. People have not changed fundamentally in thousands of years. Technology changes constantly. It's the one that must ④adapt to us. That's exactly what will happen with information technology and its devices under human-centric computing. The longer we continue to believe that computers will take us to a magical new world, the longer we will ⑤maintain their natural fusion with our lives, the hallmark of every major movement that aspires to be called a socioeconomic revolution.

Kant was a strong defender of the rule of law as the ultimate guarantee, not only of security and peace, but also of freedom. He believed that human societies were moving towards more rational forms regulated by effective and binding legal frameworks because only such frameworks enabled people to live in harmony, to prosper and to co-operate. However, his belief in inevitable progress was not based on an optimistic or high-minded view of human nature. On the contrary, it comes close to Hobbes's outlook: man's violent and conflict-prone nature makes it necessary to establish and maintain an effective legal framework in order to secure peace. We cannot count on people's benevolence or goodwill, but even 'a nation of devils' can live in harmony in a legal system that binds every citizen equally. Ideally, the law is the embodiment of those political principles that all rational beings would freely choose. If such laws forbid them to do something that they would not rationally choose to do anyway, then the law cannot be ____.

- ① regarded as reasonably confining human liberty
- ② viewed as a strong defender of the justice system
- ③ understood as a restraint on their freedom
- ④ enforced effectively to suppress their evil nature
- ⑤ accepted within the assumption of ideal legal frameworks

Giving clients sufficient opportunity to react to your designs while in progress is a key to professional success. Similarly, involving prospective building users as well as clients is even more valuable in the long run. Say your client is a large corporation, such as a health care provider. While the hospital administration may serve as your client, no doubt the perspectives of administration personnel will differ significantly from those of doctors, interns, residents, nurses, and other medical staff who use the building regularly. In addition, the experiences of patients and visitors who use the building irregularly, often as a result of life-threatening emergencies, are altogether different as well. Understanding how each type of user experiences the current medical environment as well as how each reacts to your prospective designs inevitably produces a better building. People are likely to be more satisfied with a new building or addition if they _____. For a large institution, this can translate into increased productivity on the job, reduced absenteeism, less turnover, and lower costs.

- ① have been engaged in multiple design training sessions
- ② are given the opportunity to draft a new design
- ③ have established trust with the building designers
- ④ have been consulted in the design process
- ⑤ share their perspectives on the building with each other
